Soviets, U.S. sign military pact

MOSCOW (R) - The Soviet Union and the United States, in a more MOSCOW (R) — The Soviet Union and the United States, in a move marking warming ties between their military establishments, Monday signed a pact aimed at preventing accidental conflict between them. The signing of the pact, officially titled "Agreement on the Prevention of Dangerous Military Activities," was bailed by Soviet Armed Forces Chief of Staff General Mikhail Moiseyev as "a momentous occasion in the history of our relations." Admiral William Crowe, chairman of the U.S. Joint Conference of the Conference of our relations." Admiral William Crowe, chairman of the U.S. John Chiefs of Staff, said the agreement demonstrated "how far the courage of our political leaders has brought us towards developing a more sustainable larger relationship between our countries." The pact — partly aimed at preventing accidental horder crossings by military sirreraft into each other's territory from escalating into the use of force — was signed by Moiseyev and Crowe at a ceremony in the Soviet Defence Ministry. It was completed in none months of negotiation in Washington and Moscow between teams of Soviet and U.S. general staff officers. Crowe said it was the first time military chiefs of the two powers had discussed such issues directly.

King: Jordan will surmount difficulties

AMMAN (J.T.) — His Majesty King Hussein said Monday that despite the difficult "resources-versus-population" formula which governs the Kingdom's policies and work programmes, Jordan would, by virtue of its past achievements, make it through the difficult period it is facing.

Speaking at the graduation of the first batch of graduates of the Jordan University of Science and Technology (JUST), King Hussein stressed his belief that the dedicated, committed, hardworking, productive and pious citizen remains Jordan's basic resource. That conviction, he said, will not be shaken because without it the country would surrender, lose confidence in the future and be stripped of its will and freedom to make decision.

Those who have doubts in our faith in the citizen, which we described as the real capital of the country, should realise the true reality by comparing the way we and patience of citizens in the chancellor's office in talks that were reported to have focused on U.S. President George Bush's May 29 proposal to cut conventional arms in Europe.

A West German government spokesman, Manfred Oblaender, said the initial round of talks was "more substantial and intense" than expected, and that it had been extended. A wedge of motorcycle police led the Soviet leader's black Zil

Limousine up the driveway to the chancellor's office, and Gorbachev waved from the open car window to a crowd of about 100 people, some of whom had been standing in the hot afternoon sun for nearly an hour. Friedbert Pflueger, a spokesman for West German President Richard von Weizsnecker, said an earlier one-hour meeting between the two heads of state focused on political and private subjects. He said Gorbachev also discussed the new North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO) arms-control proposals with the West German head of state in preparation for a joint statement by the two governments. He did not elaborate. Bush's proposal headed off a potentially serious NATO dispute over short-range nuclear missiles by tying negotiations on them to progress in conventional arms talks. Kohl had been pressing NATO to take up Gorbachev immediately on his offer to begin talks on eliminating the weapons. (See related story on page 8) The Soviet president, leaving behind a bloody dispute in the Central Asian Republic of Uzbekistan (see page 8), came to strengthen ties between East and West, an objective that goes to the heart of this divided nation. "I arrived with the best feelings and with the wish to do everything so that our relationship and cooperation can develop further," Gorbachev said in a brief exchange with TV reporters at the state residence, Villa Hammerschmidt. "I'm using the opportunity of this first interview to wish the citizens of the federal republic health and well-being," he told West

Germany's ZDF television.

Gorbachev, rated in opinion polls as the most popular politician in West Germany, stood stone-faced during the 21-gun salute at Cologne-Bonn airport while his wife Raisa grimmed. He then gave a warm smile to Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and chatted briefly with Soviet embassy officials before leaving for Bonn in a procession of black Soviet Zil Limousines. On Tuesday, Gorbachev and Kohl will sign a joint declaration on the future of their bilateral relations. Kohl's foreign policy adviser Horst Teltschik said it would be the first Moscow has signed with a

PEKING (Agencies) — China announced Monday a ban on all student and worker groups that spearheaded the pro-democracy movement, and demanded that their leaders surrender to author-

"All illegal organisations which incite or create social disturbances and countr-revolutionary rebellion are banned," the Ministry of Public Security announced in a notice read on Peking radio. Peking and other cities previously have told independent student and worker unions to disband, but Monday's order was the first on a national scale. China also stepped up its shrill propaganda attacks on dissident scientist Fang Lizhi, calling him a counter-revolutionary traitor who plotted the downfall of the communist state. With Fang and his wife sheltering in the United States embassy in Peking, news that the authorities had ordered their arrest raised the prospect of a major diplomatic confrontation between China and the United States.

There was tension between the two countries on another front as official media strongly criticised President George Bush for his condemnation of the army's violent repression of the pro-democracy movement June 3 and 4, and the U.S. radio station Voice of America for alleged distorted reporting.

The radio's Peking bureau stands accused of exaggerating the death toll after the authorities sent in troops with tanks to clear Tiananmen Square of pro-democracy demonstrators. Diplomats and citizens have said hundreds, perhaps thousands of peop!e were killed in the operation. The Bush administration indicated it would not permit Chinese authorities to arrest Fang and his wife, who have taken sanctuary in the U.S. embassy in Peking. When a person presents himself to one of our embassies and says he is imminent danger and we have reason to give it credence sometimes we grant refuge," a U.S. official said.

The Bush administration, in dealing with the crackdown on dissidents and other pro-democracy forces, is trying not to inflame the situation by denouncing Chinese authorities.

But the statement by the U.S. official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, indicated that any attempt to arrest Fang and Li would be resisted.

Meanwhile, the British Foreign Office said Monday it had asked China's Foreign Ministry to look into the case of a Hong Kong student who was arrested in Shanghai as he was about to board a flight home to the British colony.
The student, Yao Yongzhan, 19, was in the company of several British students and British consulate officials when he was detained at the airport. Shanghai radio said he was the head of an independent Shanghai student group and was carrying un-identified "restricted articles." British embassy spokesman Peter Davis said: "We did not know anything about him until he appeared yesterday morning saying he hadn't gotten enough money" for his plane ticket. Davies said the consulate advanced him funds and gave him a ride to the airport.

The Public Security Ministry said leaders of Peking's independent student and worker groups "must im-mediately surrender themselves to public security organs in their localities if they wish to receive lenient treatment. Those who refuse to give themselves up ...will be arrested, brought to justice and dealt with severely according to law."

The pact caused a schism in the coalition and Prime Minister Sadeq Al Mahdi was forced to reshuffle his government earlier this year under pressure from the army and professional groups.

Although Mahdi has signalled his acceptance of the November peace plan, Sudan's parliament still has not formally endorsed it.

The government and the SPLA said they would meet again in Ethiopia's capital July 4 to discuss ways to implement the November accord and pave the way for the September conference.

The joint statement was issued at the end of a two-day, closeddoor meeting between the two sides, the first in the six-year history of their ruinous war.

The rebels, who want Sudan to be governed by secular laws, have been fighting government forces in the south since 1983 to end what they see as domination of the south by the north.

The NIF, also a dominant partner in the former government, left Mahdi's coalition after he indicated acceptance of Novem-

Israel under mounting pressure to reopen West Bank schools

By Paul Taylor

OCCUPIED JERUSALEM -Israel is under mounting world and domestic pressure to reopen schools in the occupied West Bank, closed almost continuously for the last 18 months due to the Palestinian uprising.

The prolonged ban, which extends even to kindergartens and teaching in private homes, has deprived more than 300,000 Arab children of education, leaving them to wander the streets as restless foot soldiers of the anti-Israeli revolt.

It now threatens to wipe out an entire academic year.

The United States, the European Community and Israel's own education minister have all urged the government publicly in the last two weeks to change its

"With the continued closure of schools, they (the Israelis) are denying pupils their natural right," Palestinian daily newspaper Al Quds lamented Thursday.

"Hundreds of thousands of primary school pupils cannot even start the basics of reading, writing and arithmatic," it said.

Mujahedeen reinforce, reopen camps near Iranian border

The head of Israel's West Bank occupation administration, Brigadier-General Shaike Erez, has told Palestinian notables that he would allow schools to reopen if they guaranteed calm.

Erez's spokesman denied Palestinian charges that the closure was a collective punishment. The schools had become focal points for violent demonstrations and many pupils had been injured after attacking troops or stoning Israeli cars, he said. Palestinian leaders initially rejected the idea of policing the schools to prevent anti-Israeii protests. But some now say an offer of a "schools ceasefire" might demonstrate the Palestine Liberation Organisation's (PLO) power on the West Bank.

The occupation authorities have enforced the ban with a rigour that suggests more than maintaining order is at stake.

Critics say the closure of kindergartens served no security purpose. Nor did the an on the U.N. Relief and Works Agency (UN-

Iraqi position

Any military move would need approval from the Iraqi government. But it is thought unlikely that Baghdad would permit any action that would jeopardise the 10-month-old ceasefire and impede progress in deadlocked peace talks now that Khomeini has gone.

Iraqi leaders have made no comment on the Mujahedeen statements but have reaffirmed their commitment to the ceasefire and called Iran to sign a peace treaty that will end the Gulf conflict.

One diplomat said although it was unlikely the NLA "would move across the border while the ceasefire is holding, they would most certainly build on

AMMAN (I.T.) — Ali Ghandour, Royal Jordanian's chairman of the board and chief executive, has, in a recent memo to Royal lordanian (RI) staff throughout the world, expounded the new philosophy that will guide the airline into the immediate future and outlined the concomitant policy of operation.

Ghandour explained that RI, true to its perennial objectives to provide superlative service to the international traveller across its worldwide network of air services and to fulfil its mission at home to contribute to the on-going development of Jordan in various fields of endeavour, notably economically and culturally, enjoys resilience to introduce organisational changes that bring in their wake added satisfaction to all those directly concerned - its customers, employees, and financiers who have a vested interest in a continuing sound civil aviation environment.

Ghandour further explained that inasmuch as Royal Jordanian, which has become a world-class carrier, operates in an increasingly competitive environment, has to re-organise its corporate functions in pursuit of higher productivity and increased effi-

Consequently, delegation of functions as well as authority and staff involvement are central to the new direction.

RJ's Board of Directors has, as has always been the case, the general control of the organisation. However, a supervisory board consisting of the Chairman and Presidents, two elected board members and the deputy president, is being realised and with whom the president of the corporation consults closely towards the development of long-term policy and planning.

At the same time, an Executive Management Committee consisting of some key departments in RI, has been established to provide close consultation to the deputy president to whom the chairman and president has delegated the responsibility of the short-term developments of the corporation and the day-to-day

Ghandour has announced forthwith the appointment of Husam Abo Ghazaleh, until recently vice-president engineering and maintenance, to the position of deputy president.

working for Arab solidarity

AMMAN (Petra) — His Majesty King Hussein said Monday that Jordan is determined to go ahead with plans to consolidate solidarity among Arab states and strengthen the Armed Forces to defend the Arab Nation, despite the present economic difficulties it is now facing.

"Dwindling Arab financial assistance to Jordan and current economic stagnation in the Arab region will not deter Jordan from shouldering its responsibilities along the longest confrontation line with the Israeli enemy," the King said in an address to a group of youths representing the Arab Youth Forum.

He said Jordan relies on its people in general and its youth in particular to overcome the present difficulties and hardships and go ahead with plans

Urging the Jordanian youth to take the initiative in voluntary and constructive work, the King said that his letter of designation to the prime minister called on the new government to give due care to the youth sector, enabling them to contribute meaningfully towards building their country, providing help to their community and participating in the construction of model villages as part of their

The King called for seminars to be held in various areas of Jordan designed to promote dialogue between the youths and the government.

In his address at the Royal Court in the presence of His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hassan, King Hussein urged the youth to exert extra efforts towards protecting the environment in Jordan and to contribute, to the implementation of programmes for stemming pollution.

King Hussein referred to the Arab Cooperation Council (ACC), which was created by Jordan, Egypt, Iraq and North Yemen last February, and said that it was a positive national step to serve the Arab Nation and attain its aspiration.

King Hussein promised to maintain Jordan's full support for the Palestine Liberation Organisation and the struggle of the Palestinian people to regain their rights and homeland.

Prince Hassan said at the outset of the meeting that the Arab Youth Forum was created by the Jordanian chapter of Forum Humanum. The Arab Youth Forum, he said, is a nongovernmental institution that caters to the needs of the youth and helps to achieve their aspirations.

Training course opens on informational statistics

AMMAN (Petra) — A four-day training course on cultural and informational statistics organised by the Ministry of Culture in cooperation with the United Nations Educational Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UN-ESCO) was opened here Monday by Minister of Culture and Information Nasouh Al Majali. The 26 participants, all from the Ministry of Culture and Information's various departments will hear lectures on informationgathering - especially on topics concerning culture and media in general — information analysis and processing.

Majali delivered an address at the opening session underlining the importance of statistics in culture and information-gathering and data.

Such an important task, he said, is of paramount benefit for the media, radio and television, publishing houses, movie houses, museums and other centres of culture.

Dr. Hamed Al Khawwad, UN-ESCO's regional director in Amman, outlined in a brief speech his office's activities and its plans between from 1990 to 1995.

Al Hussein: Jordan to continue Jordan, Syria to discuss implementation of 1974 tourism agreement

DAMASCUS (J.T.) — Syria and Jordan will open two days of talks in Amman on Saturday to pave the way for the conclusion of an executive programme for the implementation of a 1974 tourism agreement between them.

Syrian Deputy Minister of Tourism Isam Amiri said that he will head the Syrian side to the talks which he hoped will culminate with the conclusion of the executive programme to help boost the tourist industry in both countries.

The programme would entail providing incentives for businessmen to set up joint tourist projects, to study the prospect of establishing an investment company for tourism, and to exchange ideas for recreational facilities. Amiri noted in a statement to the Jordan News Agency, Petra here.

Also according to Amiri, the pact will offer facilities for travellers between the two countries and would remove customs. financial and administrative obstacles that had been impeding tourist flow in either direction.

The new programme, he said, would provide incentives for tourist groups from Syria and Jordan to visit either country and would pave the way for tour operators from the two neighbours to cooperate in marketing tourist sites in Jordan and Syria. In addition, the programme would open the way for an exchange of information and expertise in planning, statistics, and other data needed for the tourism industry such as hotel management and training, Amiri said: Last April, a team from Royal Jordanian (RJ) the national carrier, visited Damascus and discussed unification of regulations and airline transport systems in Jordan and Syria and ways of marketing tourist sites in the two countries through the services of the two countries' respective national airlines.

In his talks with Jordanian officials here Saturday, Amiri will be accompanied by Salah Kharbatli and Usama Hanania from the Syrian Ministry of Tourism who will arrive in Amman Thursday.

Minister of Higher Education Nassereddin Al Assad and a number of officials and relatives of the graduates were present at the ceremony.

ILO meeting discusses violations of Palestinian labourers' rights

AMMAN (J.T.) - The international labour conference, which is underway in Geneva, is currently discussing a draft resolution submitted by the Arab delegates dealing with human rights and labourers' freedom in the occupied Arab territories, according to Minister of Labour Jamal

The draft resolution reminds the International Labour Organisatio (ILO) of its own resolution of 1890 about Israel's violations of labourers' rights and human rights violations in the Israeliheld Arab lands, as well as the negative effects of Jewish settlements on the condition of Arab workers under Israeli rule, the minister said in a statement upon returning home from the ILO meeting in Geneva.

The new resolution, he said, condemns Israel's actions and repressive measures against the Arab workers and labour unions, as well as Israel's continued demolition of Arab homes, its arbitrary measures against Arab workers and other measures to destroy the Arab territory's economic infrastructure.

The resolution also calls on the conference to set up a special commission to further investigate the situation in the Arab lands under Israeli rule so that a full report on the situation can be discussed by the ILO's next conference, according to the

Qatanani briefs PWF

AMMAN (J.T.) — A 27-member group representing the Pax World Foundation (PWF) in the United States had a meeting here Monday with Dr. Ahmad Qatanani, director general of the Foreign Ministry's Department of Palestinian Affairs who discussed the Palestine! question and the situation in the Israeli-held Arab lands.

The group, which arrived here on Sunday on a few-day visit to Jordan before leaving for the West Bank on Wednesday, is due to i tour Bagaa refugee camp near Amman to familiarise itself with the refugee conditions.

Oatanani outlined to the group his department's services to the Palestinians in Jordan in cooperation with the United Nations Relief. and Works Agency. (UNRWA) and facilities by the Jordanian. government to the Palestinians of the occupied territories in general. Qatanani spoke about Israel's human rights violations in the areas; occupied since 1967, and the inhuman treatment of Palestinians under occupation. The PWF is a charitable organisation working for peace around the world and the group is here on a fact-finding tour, according to Mr. Kjell Jonasson, liaison officer of the Middle East Council of Churches (MECC) office in Amman. Jonasson said that his office is providing facilities to the visitors to have meetings with officials and representatives of the Palestinians in ;

Jordan and the West Bank. Jonasson told the Jordan Times that the group, comprising mostly of university and college clergymen in the United States, has met with Palestine National Council (PNC) representatives.

Iran's 'secret weapon'

THANKS appear to be due to the Iranians for indicating to the world that they have somehow developed a technique to protect targets dozens of kilometres away by two regiments of soldiers, and have put it into use to protect their embassy in Beirut. It is indeed gratifying to the people of the Middle East to know some of their brethren in the region have acquired advanced technology far ahead of the superpowers. We hope that Tehran will live up to traditional Persian magnanimity and be gracious enough to share with us their latest achievement as reflected in the grounds offered by "Sarhanki," presumably an Iranian official, to justify the Iranian military presence in Bekaa Valley.

For starters, we would like to know what kind of a protective shield does a 3,500-strong Iranian contingent based in Lebanon's Bekaa Valley offer to the Iranian embassy situated some 65 kilometres away in the Bir Hassan area of west Beirut. Perhaps something like the "star wars" missile shield technology which the Americans are striving to achieve at great cost?

Who authorised the Iranian military presence in Lebanon? This is another question we would like to pose to "Sarhanki," who was also quoted by Beirut's Al Nahar daily as saying that the Iranian contingent in Bekaa would not be pulled back because it was the Iranian vanguard for confronting Israel.

In exchange for the answers to these questions, we can enlighten Tehran on several points on which we do not need any clarifications; assuming, of course, any Iranian leader is unaware of what the Revolutionary Guards are doing in Lebanon. - The Iranian force in Lebanon cannot but be contributing to the cycles of violence and tension in the strife-torn

— The purpose of keeping and reinforcing the contingent is nothing but to flex Iranian muscles in support of the Iranian protege -- Hizbollah -- in Lebanon and to move in d offer protection as and when Hizbollah declares its own "Islamic revolutionary" state in Lebanese territory.

 The presence of the force also implies that Iran might be expecting a rescue assault on Hizbollah bases, and indeed the Iranian embassy, where at least some of the Western hostages are reportedly held (perhaps some of the Iranian strategists see too many American movies; "Delta Force" may be?)

While we wait in hope for Tehran to send us a blueprint of its secret weapon, we would also like to throw in a piece of advice to the Iranians: apply for a patent right and don't let the Israelis catch onto your secret technology; you might simply lose it.

JORDAN PRESS EDITORIALS

Al Ra'i commented on the election plan proposed by Israeli Prime Minister Shamir for the occupied Arab territories. The paper said that the apparent aim of the election plan was to serve as a tool to end the 18-month-old intifada. Shamir wants a new Palestinian leadership to emerge from these elections to replace the PLO. and the new representatives may accept Israel's terms for a settlement, according to the paper. Shamir is "going ahead" with his plan despite strong objections from Likud extremists and the PLO. The PLO has said it will not agree to elections if the Israeli occupation forces will oversee the elections but it has indicated, however, that it would accept a U.N. observer force, the paper said. It noted that the Shamir plan was also opposed by Egypt whose minister of state is now visiting Israel and whose talks have had no apparent positive results. The paper said that despite the "superficial differences" between the two opposition parties in Israel, they have the same goals; to crush the intifada and not to talk to the PLO. These two goals are unacceptable to the Arabs and Palestinians alike, the paper said.

The increase of Palestinian resistance activity has apparently contributed to the resignation of Israel's military governor of the central region in the occupied West Bank, says Mahmoud Rimawi in his Monday column in Al Ra'i. According to the writer, the brilliant military governor who has had a very successful career, resigned from his post to pursue studies. The resignation of such a respected and successful military figure at this stage of the intifada indicates that frustration is high among Israel's military personnel and that the intifada is indeed, as Shamir has admitted, Israel's toughest confrontation todate.

Al Dustour daily commented on the inhuman treatment netted out by the Israeli authorities to the Arab population in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. The paper said that the Gaza Strip had been exposed to countless curfews, which have not been able to break the spirit of resistance. Yitzhak Rabin, the Israeli defence minister, has admitted that military force had not been able to crush the intifada, it noted.

A hot summer in Palestine

By Daoud Kuttab

OCCUPIED JERUSALEM — The cycle of violence between Israelis and Palestinians sharpened during the time the Israeli government was approving the political initiative that carries the names of Shamir and Rabin.

In public statements the prime minister and the defence minister made no apologies for the escalation of repression in the occupied territories. "I feel much better about these decisions now that we have a peace plan," said Rabin in an interview with the Jerusalem Post. It is a classic carrot and stick operation with the Israelis wielding a heavier stick while dangling the carrot of the elections.

The Gaza Strip has been the hardest hit area. More than 60,000 Gazans working in Israel were ordered back to the Strip for an indefinite period and the entire area was placed under curfew for six consecutive days. Most refugee camps in Gaza have been under curfew since the Eid al-Fitr when large demonstrations broke out. Because of its geography the Israelis can control the Strip simply by closing its two main entrances. With the sea to the west and the Egyptian border to the south, it is easily besieged.

The curfew basically gave soldiers a license to shoot anyone who stepped out of doors. There were daily casualties in Gaza despite the curfew, an indication that there was a clear attempt to In the West Bank, the Israeli army once again changed its policy of staying away from remote villages and started a planned operation aimed at "reoccupy-ing" many of the "liberated" west Bank villages. The army came up against resistance and naturally there were many casualties. Tens of Palestinian homes were demolished in this period.

Problems between Palestinians and settlers increased sharply in the Hebron area where more than 5,000 settlers live in the Kiryat Arba settlement and where some of the more militant drive through the centre of the city in a provocative way. Settlers have attacked Muslim worshippers, torn down walls, uprooted trees and broken the windshields of many Palestinian cars.

Worse is to come

On the official level, calls for a hardening of the iron fist policy have been coming from Israeli cabinet ministers. Moshe Katsav, the minister of labour and social affairs, has called on the Israeli government to close off the entire West Bank from Israel for a period of three months as a means of punishing the population. It is expected the measures taken against Gazans will be carried out in the West Bank within the next three months. Rabin has said that movement from the territories to Israel will be more strictly regulated from now on. And the Israeli army's chief of staff is demanding new legislation that will allow the army to deport anyone perpetrating a violent act against Israelis without waiting for any legal procedures.

Palestinians have responded by escalating the uprising. For only the second time since the beginning of the intifada Palestinians used live ammunition in a shootout with an army patrol near Hebron on 18 May. While the

PLO and Palestinian activists insist that the policy of refraining from the use of firearms has not changed, many expect that it will be more and more difficult to enforce this policy. It will also be difficult for Palestinian activists in the occupied territories to carry out the latest demand by the Unified Command of the uprising to kill an Israeli soldier or settler for every Palestinian that is killed, without the use of firearms.

The reaction of the people of Gaza and a reading of the latest communique of the intifada leadership shows a clear willingness on the part of Palestinians to face up to the Israeli challenge with-out backing away. If both sides insist on escalation, there will be another hot summer in Palestine.

Deng's hardline speech unlikely to solve crisis

WASHINGTON - Say 'Sweden' these days in Washington and the image of anti-nuclear moralisers immediately comes to mind. I recently visited Stockholm, and it is true that the sex shops seem to be gone. Prime time television served up an international table tennis championship (in which Sweden took first and second place), and the most potent beer you could buy had an alcohol content of 3.2 per cent — a ceiling which some U.S. college towns impose to keeptheir campuses calm.

But on the big questions of national security, the Swedes know the score. They won't build chemical weapons, for example, but may face a chemical attack. So the Swedish Defence Research Institute, I was told, has quietly manufactured samples of Tabun and Sarin, some of the most potent chemical agents in use today. As a result, Sweden's armed forces are ready for the Sweden thought long and hard about giving up the bomb, too. Through much of the 1960s the country was hopelessly split on the issue. Gradually public opinion began to turn anti-nuclear, but it was only when the pronuclear hard-liners in the military decided that Sweden would be more secure without nuclear weapons than with them that a national consensus to ban the bomb coalesced.

The hard-liners decided that the Soviets would never use nuchear weapons to invade neutral Sweden early in a European conflict because crossing this threshold would invite NATO to use nuclear weapons against Soviet forces elsewhere. If nuclear arms were already being used in Europe and the Soviets thought about invading Sweden nuclear arms to thwart the Soviet attack. On the other hand, the hard-liners reasoned, if Sweden deployed a nuclear force it would immediately become a target of Soviet nuclear overkill.

It was not the starry-eyed ideal-day's leaders in the developing world, when they think about the bomb: Sometimes less nuclearisation can mean more security. Today, for example, India's and Pakistan's nuclear programmes have advanced to the point at which each country can threaten the other with nuclear weapons. Still, neither has built a fullfledged nuclear force. If Pakistan's capabilities keep growing. however,it will soon push India, whose nuclear potential is many. times larger, to take this step.

to freeze its nuclear programme now rather than trigger an openended nuclear arms race that it could never win?

And does India want to deploy a nuclear force against Pakistan that will inevitably make China anxious? Delhi recently tested an intermediate-range ballistic missile - whose only conceivable target is China and which can be effective only with a nuclear warhead. Does Rajiv Gandhi really. believe that deploying such a missile will enhance overall Indian security? — IHT

Deafness studies sound assuring

By David Holzman

ROUGHLY one-tenth of the U.S. population experiences varying degrees of hearing loss. Knowledge is scant as to why hearing deteriorates, but such losses are rarely reversible, and, unlike eyeglasses for poor eyesight, hearing aids often do a poor job of correction.

Some of that might soon begin to change: Experts contend that the field of hearing research is making discoveries that will result in better hearing aids, more effective prevention of bearing losses and, someday, perhaps even reversal of losses. In 1988, for the first time, researchers observed in chicks the regeneration of hair cells, the transducers that convert the energy of sound into nerve impulses that tell the brain what

In October 1988, in recognition of the major breakthroughs that might soon become possible (and of powerful lobbying forces as well), then U.S. President Ronald Reagan signed a bill to set up a deafness institute at the National Institutes of Health, the premier temple of biomedical research in the United States. At the centre of all this attention is, of course, the ear, a truly amazing instrument that makes some of the best scientific measurement tools look crude by comparison. "The extremes of loudness and softness that we encounter possess energies whose ratio is some hundred-millionmillion-to-one," Peter Dallos, professor of neurobiology and audiology at Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois, wrote in Arts and Sciences, the university's magazine. "A normal young adult human can hear sounds whose frequencies extend from a rumble to a squeak, from approximately 20 to 20,000 hertz. And humans can reliably tell a difference in frequency as small as 0.1 per cent. That is, we recognise that a sound of 1,000 hertz is not the same as one whose frequency is 1,001 hertz."

Deep within the ear, in the cochlea, resides the sensory structure, the organ of Com. Here one finds the hair cells, which were originally thought to wave passively in the breeze, each turned to resonate with the sound of a specific frequency. It was too simple a model to account for the extraordinary range of hearing, says William E. Brownell of the Centre for Hearing Sciences at Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine in Baltimore, Maryland. In fact, in the early 1980s, he says, Hallowell Davis, director of research emeritus of the Centrai Institute for the Deaf in St. Louis, Missouri, was postulating the existence of a "cochlear

But unbeknownst to Davis, Brownell was making an amazing discovery. There are two sets of hair cells, the outer and the inner. The inner ones are the transducers; the role of the outer hair cells had been mysterious. Brownwell had been investigating the biophysical properties of the membrane of outer hair cells that had been taken from the ear of a guinea pig when he discovered that they expanded and con-tracted in response to changing electrical charges. This was so surprising that, he says, "my colleague said, 'We've got prob-lems." But in fact, they had discovered the amplifier mechanism.

Exactly how the outer hair cells work is unknown. Dallos thinks that they probably expand and contract as fast as 20,000 cycles per second in order to account for the upper range of human hearing. The fastest type of muscle known, the flight muscle of an insect, can expand and contract at just 200 cycles per second. "The mere phenomenon calls for our understanding of a completely novel biological motor for which we have no other example," says

Whatever the mechanism, the outer hair cells are the most vulnerable part of the ear. Their deterioration, much more than that of the inner ones, is associated with most bearing loss due to aging, noise and environmental factors. It is perhaps not surprising that such fine instruments should be so susceptible to injury, but scientists have only a sketchy idea as to what damages them.

Noise is one of the biggest culprits. Hearing deteriorates with age much more in industrialised nations than in nonindustrialised nations, says Barbara Bohne, a professor of otolaryngology at Washington Universi-School of Medicine in St. Louis. For example, hearing loss among the aged is rare on Easter Island, the Chilean territory in the South Pacific, but some residents who emigrate to the industrialised areas of South America experience hearing loss, she says, "so it's probably noise more than anything else." Nonetheless, the evidence is equivocal. "The man ear are not strictly what you would find with noise-induced all hearing loss is exposure to noise," says Dallos. "The real problem is, the causative factors are probably many, and they probably interact and potentiate one another." Researchers believe diet, chemical pollution and certain drugs also contribute to

For example, scientists post-ulate that the same dietary fats that contribute to heart attack can lead to deterioration of hearing. Clogged arteries slow the flow of oxygen to the delicate outer hair cells, killing some of them. "We need to keep the circulatory system healthy, to prevent those strokes in the inner ear that result in little hearing losses," says Josef Miller of the department of otolaryngology at the University of Michigan School of Medicine.

Researchers are also studying drugs that, when administered to animals immediately after they have been exposed to noise, can prevent noise-induced damage from occurring by increasing blood flow to their inner ear. Certain drugs, notably the aminoglycosides, antibiotics whose names end in "mycin" and ciplatin (an anticancer drug), can cause hearing loss.

"There are a number of patients each year where you have a choice of giving a high amount of the drug, but the probability of hearing loss is 90 per cent," says Miller. And certain combinations of drugs are much more deadly to hair cells than any one of the drugs alone, experts say. In the 1960s, patients who took gentamicins and diuretics at the same time, neither of which by itself should have caused permanent toxicity, ended up deaf, says Miller's colleague, Jochen Schacht.

Other drugs such as caffeine and aspirin are known to cause transient tinnitus (ringing in the ears) and slight transient reductions in hearing acuity. It is a matter of debate whether such drugs can cause permanent hearing loss.
So far, prevention is the best medicine. But a variety of developments herald a new era in the treatment of the hearing impaired. New diagnostic tools make it possible for researchers to peer into the inner ear noninvasively, says Dr. Ralph F. Nauton, acting associate director for extramural research at the new National Institute on Deafness changes we see in the aging bu--and Other Communication Disorders of the National Institutes of Health

"Britain leads the way. Second in line are the United States and couldn't be helped by hearing aids can now be helped tremendously," says Dr. Charles Berlin, director of the Kresge Hearing Research Laboratory at Louisiana State University Medical School. Those patients were not nerve deaf, he says.

The discovery was made with tiny probe microphones placed deep in an animal's ear to find out what elements of sound were reaching the inner ear from a hearing aid. "Someone reasoned we could do the same thing for our patients. We were surprised to find there was a huge variation in what a hearing aid will do from one ear to the next, and the variation is controlled by the geometry of the ear canal."

Patients were traditionally fitted "by writing a prescription of amplification for a mythical average ear," says Berlin "That's a way to get only a third or so of the ears properly fitted."

The next frontier in research on hearing is the study of auditory processing that takes place in the brain. This is needed to make use of the latest hearing aid technology, says Robert G. Turner, director of the Audiology and Speech Clinic at the University of California at San Francisco. Hearing aids have recently been developed that use computer technology to selectively dampen certain frequencies and amplify others, which is the kind of thing the outer hair cells do that allows one to listen to a single conversation in a room full of conversations. But Turner complains: We have this wonderful new technology and we don't know how to use it yet." He is setting up a team to study the matter by. for example, finding out what cues from speech sounds are picked up by the brain and what information in sound "is thrown away. If you have a hearing aid amplifying sounds that are not used by the auditory system, what's the use of that?" Further research on what the hair cells are doing will contribute as well. "The hope is that by learning more about the effect of hair cell damage on the processing of speech, we might better understand how this digital technology can compensate for that,

Moving higher up in the brain, a better understanding of how auditory processing works may have profound implications for the success of cochlear implants, prostheses that replace the cochlea and its hair cells, transducing sound waves into nerve impulses that travel to the auditory cortex.

In the human, there may be 50,000 nerve fibers leading from the cochlea to the brain," says Dallos. "The very best of the cochlear implants may have 12 to 24 channels, so what we are looking at is a remarkable reduction in information capacity of those implants."

Cochlear implants have so little to offer that they are used only in the profoundly deaf, people who cannot be helped by conventional hearing aids and have no ability to recognise and distinguish between spoken words, says Miller. He says researchers are looking optimistically to patients' becoming able to discriminate 30 to 40 per cent of speech using the prostheses.

But "in spite of that remark-able constriction of information,". says Dallos, a tiny minority of those implanted "are able to retrain themselves to understand human speech and appreciate music. That tells us that between our ears is an extremely plastic brain, and we have to think in terms of exploring further the plasticity of that brain."

Speaking of the experiments in which cells regenerated in chicks, Dallos says, "The field must assimilate the remarkable advances in molecular and cell biology, so that we can learn to make mammalian cells regenerate and repair themselves. On the extreme, we have to look at the receiving organ, the brain, to better understand its plasticity. and how it can make use of the information. risk of choking growth

BASLE, Switzerland (R) — Industrial countries must not throw away the gains made in reducing inflation but they also must not risk halting the record period of economic growth since late 1982, the head of the Bank for International Settlements (BIS) said Monday.

"The present task of monetary policy is to try to steer a middle course between these two risks," Wim Duisenberg, president of the BIS which acts as central banker to the world's central banks, said at the institution's annual meeting.

Duisenberg, who is also governor of the Dutch central bank, said central banks had progressively tightened monetary policy but the average inflation rate in industrial nations had quickened modestly over the past year to 4.5 per cent by March.

"The signs of increased inflationary pressures are widespread and we do not yet know whether the present degree of monetary tightness will be enough to bring them under control," he added.

Echoing conclusions by BIS General Manager Alexandre Lamfalussy in the BIS annual report, Duisenberg said the heavy balance of payments imbalances between the United States, Japan and West Germany were not expected to come down much further and would probably rise again in 1990.

He argued that the main burden for dealing with the problem lay with the U.S. which had to

Sharply conflicting with official U.S. views, Duisenberg said Japan and West Germany had no scope for boosting domestic demand to suck in more imports without running the risk of rekindling inflation.

U.S. Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady said two weeks ago Washington should not be expected to act in a vacuum and urged West Germany and Japan to boost their economies and hold interest rates down.

Last year the U.S. had a $135.3 billion deficit on its current account, while Japan and West Germany respectively had surpluses of $79.6 billion and $48.6 billion, BIS figures show.

"The seriousness of the situation, the human misery involved and its disruptive character for the political system are plain for all to see," Lamfalussy told the meeting Monday.

He noted various proposals, including one by Brady, had been put forward to deal with the problem and it was essential progress should be made.

The problem was still too big for a grand solution, but part of the "stumbling block" could be chipped away, and help should be directed towards those in greatest need, he added.

The Brady plan, launched three months ago, envisages economic reform in debtor countries under surveillance by the International Monetary Fund, new loans and swapping debt for equity in industrial projects as well as formally cutting developing nations'

BIS warns of inflation, Algerian government proposes landmark joint venture law

ALGIERS (R) — Algeria has drawn up landmark legislation that would for the first time allow foreign firms to have a majority said a draft law submitted last week to the national assembly would be a major test for the reform drive of President Chadli Benjedid.

Establishment figures of the ruling National Liberation Front (FLN), schooled in socialist orthodoxy, were likely to resist unprecedented new incentives for foreign capital, the sources said.

The government argues that foreign investment is needed to stimulate economic growth and provide jobs for a burgeoning young generation that took to the streets last year to vent economic and social grievances.

Dollar shoots up on panic buying

LONDON (R) — The dollar rose sharply in Europe Monday to its highest level for 21/2 years investors bet on no further cuts soon in U.S. interest rates.

"It was panic-buying," said one Frankfurt dealer. Investors' appetite for dollars was fuelled Friday by a strong rise in U.S. producer prices which convinced markets inflation was still a problem for the world's biggest economy.

In addition to being underpinned by relatively high interest rates, the dollar is getting support as a result of concern about the turmoil in China and a flight of funds from yen because of political uncertainty in Japan, dealers move since Friday," said Andre Tomasiewicz, a Citibank vice president in Paris.

Dealers were watching out for further central bank intervention to try to contain the dollar's rise. We may see intervention today but it will be interesting to see whether the Bundesbank makes a big effort," said Joachim Zimmermann with Berliner Bank in West Germany.

There has been no major coordinated central bank dollar selling since May 30, when the dollar stood at 2.01 marks.

Markets were also jittery about whether a meeting of central bankers in Basle would take any decisions about the dollar's recent strength. Industrialised nations are worried about the effect of a stronger dollar on inflation and trade imbalances.

One focus of this week's currency market business will be Thursday's U.S. trade figures for April which will show whether there has been any further easing of the trade imbalances.

The stronger dollar hit other markets. Gold dived to 33 month low and Tokyo stocks closed at their weakest for 1989. Dwindling market faith in Brit-

KABUL (AP) - When Afghan blue, pink and beige notes to tend of gasoline tankers and trucks from reaching the capital, the news was ignored by the government-controlled media.

But the solemn-faced men who trade currency in the open courtyard along the Kabul river took note, quickly moving the dollar up against the weak afghani.

Two days later, word came that government troops had reopened the road, and the convoy made the 450-kilometre journey from the Soviet border to Kabul without being bombed or rocketed.

The dollar dropped. Kabul's money market, or ·Serai Shazad, is a balconied building supported by rusting beams with an inner courtyard where camel trains once stopped overnight.

For more than a decade, Afghanistan has been plagued by civil war and ruled by a government that professes Marxist economic theories. But, as it has for hundreds of years, free enterprise rules Kabul.

The roads running north to the Soviet Union and south and east to Pakistan are the city's lifeline, the tides of their accessibility a key factor in the rhythm of the Serai Shazad.

Helicopter gunships, tanks and rocket launchers often are pressed into service to open the roads and allow the convoys to carry food, fuel and sometimes weapons to Kabul.

At other times, the trucks rumble into the capital with ease. For money dealer Juma Mohammad, that means one thing — even the rebels have

"It's really quite simple," Mohammad said. "There is a

Jordan, Syria discuss transport

AMMAN (Petra) — The joint Jordanian-Syrian committee charged with promoting transport and transit operations between the two countries opened a meeting here Monday. The committee will discuss matters related to exempting public and private transport vehicles from duty if they carry passengers or national products. The committee members will also discuss the prospect of concluding a bilateral transport agreement that would organise the transportation of travellers and goods on roads between the two neighbouring states. Also on the agenda is a report on the 1988 closing accounts, the general budget, and operations for 1989.

Italian judges, lawyers strike

ROME (R) - Italian judges and trial lawyers began a rare two-day strike Monday in protest over shortages of administrative staff which they say are paralysing the indicial system. The stoppage, which will halt most trials and criminal investigations for 48 hours. was called by the National Association of Magistrates to highlight staff shortages that can delay criminal cases for years. "We are striking in protest at the 'strike' that the political classes have proclaimed for years and which has paralysed justice," said association president Raffaele Bertoni. The association has also complained at delays in recruiting hundreds of extra judges, magistrates and court-house stenographers needed when a new penal code comes into force in Italy in October. "Unless personneland support structures are prepared in time, the system is destined to die at birth and we want to let the people know that we will not be the slightest bit to blame," Bertoni said.

S. Korea loses low cost privilege

SEOUL (AP) - More foreign firms are withdrawing from South Korea, mainly because of growing labour costs, the Bank of Korea has reported. The report showed 49 foreign firms pulled out between January and May this year, compared with 26 in the same period last year. U.S. firms topped the list with 21, followed by Japan with 11. Average wages in South Korea rose by 20 per cent last year. Many firms have been hit by labour disputes and strikes for more pay and better working conditions. South Korean government officials predicted more foreign firms would consider transferring their plants from South Korea to South East Asia and other countries with cheaper wages.

Ethiopia orders Boeings worth $260m

SEATTLE, Washington (AP) - Ethiopian Airlines has ordered four Boeing 757 passenger jets and one 757 freighter in a deal valued at about $260 million, Boeing commercial airplanes announced Friday. The airline also has options on two more 757s. All aircraft will be powered by Pratt and Whitney PW2040 engines. The 757 passenger models for the Ethiopian flag carrier will seat 156 passengers. The airline will use them mainly to replace 727 jetliners on regional routes, but the planes also will be equipped for long-range operations, Boeing said. The new order brings to 564 the total number of 757s ordered from Boeing.

FRENCH CAMERAMAN KILLED IN AFRICA RALLY: A French television cameraman died after being hit by a truck during the last stages of a truck rally from France to Sierra Leone, his company said in Paris Sunday. Vincent Albasini, 27, died in the night after the accident during the gruelling desert rally from Clermont-Ferrand in the south of France to Freetown, La Cinq television station said. (R)

ARGENTINA CHAMPIONSHIPS IN QUESTION: The world basketball championships, scheduled for Argentina next year, are in serious doubt and may have to be moved, a top official said in Pula, Yugoslavia Monday, "We have had very little information from Argentina and that which we have does not favour the possibility of holding the championships there,' Borislav Stankovic, general secretary of the International Basket-ball Federation (FIBA) said. Argentina, suffering severe econo-mic problems and currently in a period of transition between governments, has fallen behind schedule in organising the competition and has had trouble raising enough money. have had no confirmation from the new government, and the old. one said it could not guarantee any future activities," Stankovic

JOYNER-KERSEE WINS AT EVENT NAMED AFTER HER: Having a track meet in Los Angeles named in her honour didn't come with any guarantees for Jackie Joyner-Kersee. Joyner-Kersee won the 400-metre hurdles at the inaugural Jackie Joyner-Kersee Invitational Saturday at UCLA but finished second in the 100-metre hurdles. "I felt good in the 400 hurdles. but my confidence isn't 100 per cent yet." said Joyner-Kersee, who won gold medals in the heptathlon and long jump at the Seoul Olympics. Joyner-Kersee got off to a good start in the 400 hurdles and won by 20 metres over Victoria Fulcher. Jovner-Kersee was hand-timed in 55.3 seconds, a major improvement over her time of 57.15 two weeks ago at the Bruce Jenner classic in San Jose. Flucher was clocked in 56.71 and Kathy Freeman in 57.22 to take third. It was only the third time Joyner-Kersee had run the 400 hurdles since 1985, when she ran her personal-best of 55.05. (AP)

MERCEDES TRIUMPH AT LE MANS: Mercedes marked their return to Le Mans after a 34-year absence by finishing first and second in the 24-hour sportscar race on Sunday. Victory went to West Germans Jochen Mass and Manuel Reuter and co-driver Stanley Dickens of Sweden. It helped bury bitter memories of 1955 when a Mercedes hurtled off the track and killed 82 spectators, an accident which prompted the company to quit the race. Italians Mauro Baldi, Gianfranco Brancatelli and Briton Kenny Acheson captured second place for Mercedes ahead of the Porsche of West German Hans Stuck, twice a Le Mans winner, and Frenchman Bob Wollek. Mass and his co-drivers completed 388 laps, five more than the second Mercedes. Mercedes' arch-rivals Jaguar, who won last year with Dutchman Jan Lammers, suffered a series of disappointments with their four cars. Leading hope Lammers led for 80 laps during the night, but around dawn gearbox trouble forced a 50-minute pit stop. (R)

Older generation of tennis stars looks forward to Wimbledon

Lendi, Edberg try to forget Chang

PARIS (R) - Ivan Lendi and Stefan Edberg, suddenly the old men of tennis, turn to the English grass courts as they try to repair the self-esteem which teenager Michael Chang battered in Paris.

Chang, 17, brushed aside the pair on his way to becoming the youngest French Open champion and the youngest Grand Slam winner in the open era, inspiring the hopes of other teenagers in the build-up to Wimbledon.

Last year's French champion Mats Wilander found himself at 24 the oldest quarter-finalist in ment at Roland Garros. His exit there, in a shock straight sets defeat by unseeded Andrei Chesnokov, persuaded Wilander, like Lendl, to accept a wild card for the London grasscourt event at Queen's this week. and self-doubt. and Marseille take titles Real Madrid

Real Madrid and Marseille collected awards at European soccer's end-of-season prizegiving at the weekend while Internazionale extends their domination of the Italian League to record-breaking proportions.

Noisy celebrations went on late into the night in Madrid after Real wrapped up their fourth successive league title with a commanding 3-0 home win over Espanol which ended Barcelona's hopes of catching them.

"I'm very pleased to be leaving like this," said Real's outgoing Dutch coach Leo Beenhakker, who has been with the side three years and is handing over next season to John Toshack, the former Liverpool player and Welsh international.

"Another chance at the European Cup is very important to this club," he added.

Beenhakker said the team had coped very well with the pressure although this hardly applied to midfielder Michel Gonzalez.

He has suffered a foot injury for the last few weeks and reacted to the crowd's derision for a poor performance Sunday by stalking off the pitch just before halftime without waiting for a substitute. "It was a combination of the pain and the public," said Beenhakker. Striker Emilio Butragueno, who scored the first goal and laid on the second for Hugo Sanchez, said it had been a difficult season, particularly after Real's European Cup semifinal defeat by eventual winners AC Milan. But he said: "We've recovered from that and we're in good form now to win the Spanish Cup."

Napoli's defeat, only the fifth this season, opened up a chance

Ryzhkov takes charge of efforts to end Uzbek unrest

MOSCOW (Agencies) — Prime Minister Nikolai Ryzhkov flew to the Fergana region of Soviet Uzbekistan Monday in an apparent attempt to end more than a week of rioting in which at least 100 people have been reported killed.

TASS news agency said Ryzhkov was accompanied by Viktor Chebrikov, a fellow member of the ruling politburo and former KGB chief, who currently heads a commission on legal affairs.

They are to consider questions of normalising the situation in the Fergana region, a scene of interethnic disturbances over the past weeks." TASS said without giving further details of their programmes.

It was the first visit by members of the central Soviet leadership to the Fergana valley since rioting began about 10 days ago, apparently with attacks by Uzbeks on the local Meskhetian minority in the regional capital, Tashkent.

Uzbek Communist Party leader Rafik Nishanov left a meeting in Moscow of the congress of People's Deputies, the new Soviet parliament, to go to Ferga-

Bush arms proposals fall short — Karpov

Deputy Soviet Foreign Minister Victor Karpov, who has served as chief negotiator in East-West arms talks, also accused Washington of dragging its feet about negotiations on short-range nuclear weapons.

Karpov was commenting in an editorial in the New York Times about proposals Bush made at a North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO) summit in Brussels

The Soviet official said early agreement could be expected on military cutbacks in some areas as Bush's proposals for reductions in tanks and armoured personnel carriers were virtually the same as those tabled earlier by the Warsaw Pact.

The same, he said, could be expected of proposed reductions in artillery and helicopters.

But he said Bush's call for a 15 per cent reduction in combat aircraft on both sides was unjustified as the United States was seeking BUENOS AIRES (Agencies) — Argentine President Raul Alfonsin will probably cut short his six-year mandate by four months and hand over power to President-elect Carlos Menem by Aug. 10, according to Menem associates and other officials.

"It's very probable that the transfer of power will take place in the first 10 days of August," former Supreme Court Justice Julio Oyhanarte, Menem's secretary of justice-designate, told Reuters in a telephone inter-

Soviet panel quietly shifting foreign policy, defector says

By Bryan Brumley The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - A Soviet defector has been telling U.S. government agencies some of the inner secrets of the little understood Kremlin body that plays a key role in charting Soviet foreign policy.
Under Soviet leader Mikhail

Gorbachev, the International Department of the Communist Party Central Committee has shifted course, loosening its ties with Marxist parties in the West and cultivating relations with other less radical elements, said the defector, Evgeny Novikov.

"Gorbachev started to promote the principles of his "new thinking." to find new clients, sometimes at the expense of old clients, to find parties and groups that have influence in capitalist countries," Novikov said in a recent interview with the Associated Press.

The new approach has brought the Soviet Union closer to American and Western European environmental and peace groups that agree with Gorbachev's approach to disarmament and attempts to lessen international tension, said Novikov.

Because his work in the International Department centred on Arab and Middle Eastern affairs, Novikov declined to speculate on which Western groups were sympathetic to Gorbachev's new approach. U.S. intelligence officials, who said they were not familiar with the specifics of Novikov's case, confirmed that Novikov's description met their understanding of the International Department.

The International Department, for which Novikov worked from 1970 until his defection last year. was the successor to the Comintern, or Communist International, or later the Cominform, disbanded by Josef Stalin in 1947. The Comintern was the main organ of Kremlin influence on communist parties outside the Soviet Union, a means of molding political platforms and sometimes recruiting intelligence agents, according to numerous accounts by defectors.

The International Department shares with the Foreign Ministry responsibility for formulating Soviet foreign policy, which is decided by the ruling polithuro, Novikov said. The Foreign Ministry carries out state-to-state contacts, while the International Department handles party-to-party matters.

Senior International Department experts are driven in chauffeured cars, receive salaries equal to those of deputy ministers and have access to intelligence reports from the KGB and the defence and foreign affairs ministries, Novikov said in a paper prepared for the U.S. government. to power in March 1985, he tried

Bomb kills 6 at Delhi rail station

NEW DELHI (Agencies) — A bomb exploded in New Delhi railway station on Monday killing at least six people and injuring 44, police said.

'It was a crude bomb. It was not an accident," a police spokesman said.

The blast in the heart of the Indian capital occurred shortly after 10 a.m. (0430 GMT) when the busy station was crowded. Witnesses said the blast left the main waiting hall spattered with blood and littered with clothing and luggage. The bomb, apparently concealed in a bedding-roll, gouged a small crater in the concrete

The police spokesman said it was impossible to say at this stage who was responsible for the blast, but Delhi authorities said last week that Sikh extremists might be planning to strike.

"It was a time bomb and a very, very powerful one," Additional Police Commissioner Rajindra Mohan said at the blood-spattered

He said forensic experts had recovered a portion of the bomb that contained an intact battery cell and nuts and bolts, intended to injure people in the station.

Mohan declined to speculate who might be responsible. An officer at the police control centre said six people were killed and 40 other were taken to a nearby hospital.

The bomb left a crater about 30 centimetres deep and 60 centimetres in diameter in the floor of the passenger hall. Sandals, sunglasses, cooked rice and bread were strewn across the floor. blown by the force of the blast or dropped by panicked people who had been waiting for trains.

The bomb went off at a peak hour at the station when most trains from eastern India arrive in New Delhi. Between 600 and 700 people were in the passenger hall at the time.

More than 150,000 people and at least 158 trains pass through the Mohan noted that waiting passengers often lie or sleep on the floor of the hall, and he said many more people might have been killed had they been standing when the bomb went off.

Second MiG-29 performs over Le Bourget

PARIS (Agencies) — Thousands of visitors and industry professionals cast their eyes skyward over Le Bourget airport Sunday to watch the first demonstration flight by a Soviet MiG-29 since the crash of an identical fighter last week.

The camouflage-green fighter, emblazoned with a red star and the number 304 on one vertical stabiliser, is the surviving MiG-29 of two that arrived at the Paris air show six days ago.

It flew loops and spins in the blue sky and swooped over the runway Sunday afternoon, its engines spitting pale fire. The crowd applauded as the cockpit popped open at the end of the flight and the pilot, Roman Taskaev, emerged.

Kvochur managed to eject at 150 metres and open his parachute enough to break his fall. Soviet officials said Kvochur, who suffered bruises and stomach injuries, was released from a French army hospital Friday and would appear Tuesday at a news conference at Le Bourget, the airfield north of Paris that is the site of the world's most famous air show.

No precise cause of the crash has been disclosed, but on Thursday officials said the left engine of the MiG-29 failed to fire as the pilot was doing a low-level left turn. The plane turned slightly on its side, fell to the ground and burst into flame.

A Soviet aviation expert said a bird could have caused the MiG-29 crash on Thursday.

R. Belyakov told the army newspaper Krasnaya Zvezda an investigation had cleared pilot Kvochur of all guilt. "(Belyakov) believes that the engine could have failed because of a foreign object entering it while on the ground owing to the jet stream from passing aircraft or from a mid-air collision with a bird," the newspaper said.

It quoted Belyakov, chief designer of the Mikoyan aeronautical concern, as saying French and Soviet specialists were continuing their investigation into the crash.

Krasnaya Zvezda said Kvochur had steered the plane to the ground, away from stands... crowded with spectators watching the air display.

The Air Show Daily newspaper, quoting Soviet pilot Evgeni-Frolov, said Kvochur was saved by an ejection seat called a K-36 jet being tilted at an angle.

The seat also is installed in the Sukhoi-27 cockpit, seen for the first time in the West during the air show. The SU-27, part of a large group of Soviet aircraft on display, has been the star of the skies all week. Two Soviet pilots are taking turns flying the jet, each performing his own style of routine.
